Start with the reader

A practical checklist for writing useful, clear website content that search engines can understand.

The goal: help a potential client understand what Izart does, see evidence of the work, and decide what to do next. Write for that person first. Google recommends helpful, reliable content created for people. [1]

Before you write

[ ] Choose one reader. A founder launching a brand? A marketing lead considering a rebrand? Write around their situation.

[ ] Choose one main job for the page. Explain a service, demonstrate a project, answer a question, or introduce the studio.

[ ] Pick a clear topic and related phrases. Start with the language clients use. Treat the examples below as ideas to research, not verified keywords.

[ ] Give each page a distinct purpose. Avoid several near-identical pages targeting the same question. Link related topics together.

[ ] Collect evidence first. Gather deliverables, design decisions, client-approved quotes, results, and accurate project details.

Suggested topic map for Izart

Page	Main content job
Homepage	Explain the studio, core services, audience and proof.
Brand identity	Explain positioning, identity systems and deliverables.
Website design + development	Explain UX, design, development and handover.
Spatial design	Explain environments, wayfinding and physical experiences.
Case study	Show the challenge, decisions, work and outcome.
Manifesto	Explain Izart's beliefs and working approach.
Article	Answer one specific question in useful depth.

Write clearly and specifically

Use this checklist while drafting each page. Keep Izart's voice, while making the meaning easy to understand.

[ ] Make the main heading clear. Use one clear H1 as an editorial convention. It should describe this page. Example: "Brand identity design for ambitious businesses."

[ ] Explain the offer early. In the opening, say what you do, who it helps, and what the work includes. A creative headline can sit alongside a concrete explanation.

[ ] Use topic phrases naturally. Include relevant language where it helps: title, heading, introduction and suitable subheadings. Never force repeated phrases or target a keyword density. [2]

[ ] Use headings that answer real questions. Examples: "What is included?", "How does the process work?", and "What happens after launch?"

[ ] Explain the work behind the visuals. Describe the problem, the choices you made, and why those choices suited the client. A gallery alone leaves useful context unstated.

[ ] Replace broad promises with details. Instead of "We transform brands", explain the actual work: positioning, logo, typography, packaging or website design.

[ ] Support every claim. Use verified results and accurate credentials. Avoid "best", "No. 1", guaranteed rankings, or conversion claims without evidence. [1]

[ ] Keep paragraphs easy to scan. Use short paragraphs, specific verbs and plain language. Explain terms like "digital ecosystem" the first time they appear.

[ ] Answer enough, then stop. There is no required SEO word count. Cover the reader's questions without padding or repeating sections. [1]

[ ] Keep key explanations as readable page text. Do not put the only explanation inside an image, video, or decorative graphic. [2]

An example opening - adapt to the actual scope

Heading: Brand identity design for ambitious businesses
Opening: Izart Studio develops brand identities across logos, typography, colour, packaging and digital touchpoints. We bring strategy and design together to give your business a consistent, recognisable presence.

Use "Delhi-based" where location genuinely helps a client. Do not repeat city names across every heading or imply offices you do not have.

Structure each kind of page

These are recommended outlines for Izart, not Google ranking formulas. Use only sections that help the reader.

Service page

1. Clear offer: what the service is and who it suits.
2. The client's problem: when they might need this work.
3. Scope: actual deliverables and what is optional.
4. Process: the main stages, collaboration and approvals.
5. Evidence: relevant projects, examples or approved testimonials.
6. Practical answers: timing, budget approach, handover and ongoing support.
7. Next step: a clear enquiry CTA.

Suggested title: Brand Identity Design Services | Izart Studio
Suggested section headings: What your identity system includes / How we develop your identity / Selected brand identity projects

Case study

[ ] Identify the client and scope. Name the industry, services provided and project year when approved for publication.

[ ] Explain challenge, decisions and delivery. Show what needed to change, why you chose the approach, and what Izart actually produced.

[ ] Describe outcomes honestly. Separate completed deliverables from measured business results. If metrics are unavailable, describe what was delivered and enabled.

[ ] Connect to the relevant service. A packaging project should link naturally to the brand identity service page.

Article

[ ] Answer a specific question early. For example: "What should a startup prepare before a branding project?" Give a direct answer before expanding.

[ ] Add experience readers cannot get anywhere. Use Izart's process, real examples, trade-offs and original observations. Name the author and link to their relevant background. [1]

[ ] Check facts and cite sources. Link to reliable original sources for research or factual claims. Update content when the substance changes.

Manifesto tip: let this page explain your philosophy. Link to services and projects where relevant; it does not need to carry every commercial search phrase.

Before you publish

A final writing and handoff checklist. Fill in the brief below before sending content for implementation.

[ ] Write a unique SEO title. Describe this specific page concisely, with the important topic first and Izart Studio where useful. Google can choose a different displayed title. [3]

[ ] Write a unique meta description. Summarise the offer and reason to visit in one or two clear sentences. Google may use page text instead; character counts are not a guaranteed display limit. [4]

[ ] Add useful internal links. Use descriptive wording such as "explore our brand identity work" where natural, rather than vague links with no context. Link to relevant services and case studies. [5]

[ ] Write meaningful image descriptions. Describe what an informative image shows in context. Example: "Soak Studio bottle packaging with earthy colours and an arched label." Decorative images should use empty alt text. [2]

[ ] Review accuracy and the next step. Check names, service scope, dates, claims and contact details. Make the enquiry action easy to understand.

[ ] Hand off all required fields. Provide the page copy, SEO title, meta description, image alt text, internal link targets and CTA destination together.

Reusable content brief

Page / URL: _____
Reader and their main question: _____
Main topic / phrases to research: _____
H1 and opening answer: _____
Sections and evidence needed: _____
Relevant service / project links: _____
SEO title and meta description: _____
CTA and destination: _____

Sources and limits

Based on Google Search Central guidance consulted 29 October 2026. Page structures and sample copy are editorial recommendations for Izart. Keywords have not been validated against search-volume or Search Console data. This checklist covers content; indexing and other technical checks remain separate.

1. Helpful, reliable, people-first content

2. SEO Starter Guide

3. Title links

4. Meta descriptions and snippets

5. Internal links and anchor text